Randomized Trial of Intensive MI to Improve Drinking Outcomes among Women
This study is a randomized clinical trial of Intensive Motivational Interviewing (IMI) for women with alcohol dependence. Outcomes between women assigned to IMI and to a single session of MI are being compared at 2, 6, and 12 months. Qualitative interviews are being conducted to assess women's experiences of the intervention and views about what was and was not helpful.

Addiction Recovery Residences to Improve Health Outcomes in High-risk Men

This mixed methods, formative research study is assessing the needs and outcomes of men who have sex with men (MSM) in recovery residences, how a residence designated for gay and bisexual men may differ from other recovery residences, and barriers to opening recovery residences for MSM and other members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender community.

Title: Health Intervention Project for Transgender Women (HIPTW)

This project aims to prevent substance abuse and HIV risk behaviors among transgender women of color in Alameda and San Francisco counties. The project targets high-risk and young-adult transgender women (age 18 to 24) who are engaging in substance abuse and HIV-related sexual risk behaviors. Based on evidence based intervention programs, we will develop, implement, and evaluate a motivational enhancement intervention (MEI) which will be adapted and tailored to high risk transgender women of color.

Title: Enhancing Engagement and Retention in Quality HIV Care for Transgender Women of Color in Oakland, Alameda County

This 5-year Butterfly Project will identify a total of 900 high risk transgender women and enroll a total of 180 transgender women who live with HIV in the Butterfly Project (20 in year 1 and 40 each year in year 2 through 5). The Butterfly Project will utilize innovative intervention programs with multiple techniques to engage and retain African American transgender women who live with HIV. In addition, the Butterfly Project will increase the capacity of transgender communities in Alameda County through operating the Butterfly Nest, a store-front safe place for transgender women of color, where weekly support groups and health promotion workshops will be held. Local measures will be developed to evaluate the effectiveness and impact of the Butterfly Project.

The UCLA CTN Node participates in behavioral, pharmacological, and combined behavioral and pharmacological treatment trials for drug dependence and conducts research on treatment practices within and across CTN Nodes. Dr. Polcin was a co-investigator, trainer and clinical supervisor CTN studies of MI and MET. Studies were designed to test whether MET and MI could be learned by counselors employed in community programs and whether they were more effective than treatment as usual. A random assignment design was employed at 11 different treatment sites. Fidelity monitoring showed MI and MET were delivered with competence and adherence to the intervention manual. Results for the MI intervention showed increased retention relative to treatment as usual. MET showed outcomes that differed across study sites.
